This farmstead would appear to date from the mid 19th century. The two story, five bay farmhouse and stone end barn are typical examples of the period. The late 19th century accretions to the house are rather elaborate and should be noted as part of its architectural history. The house has two front doors which could suggest dual usage, and the owner related a story that it also served as an inn.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This complex is located along U. S. Route 40-A just south of Funkstown in Washington County, Maryland. The house stands at the west edge of the road, facing east while the barn, on the opposite side of the road, faces south.

The house is a two story, five bay brick building resting on low stone foundations. A one story brick wing with frame additions extends to the rear or west. Flemish bonding is used at the front elevation with American or common bond construction at the side and rear walls. Flat arches of brick are present above the window and door openings.

Windows and doors appear to have been placed symmetrically in the front wall. First story windows appear to have been elongated during the late 19th century. Most have two over two pane sashes, the upper panes being curved to form double arches. At the rear of the house a nine over six sash remains. To most of the narrow window frames are attached shutters with movable louvers.

Entrances are located in the second and fourth bays of the front elevation. The original doors appear to have been replaced but the framing remains including transoms which have been enclosed. A 20th century gable roofed one story porch extends from the three central bays of the front elevation.

A massive Italianate bracketed cornice has been added to the front elevation and to the corners of the rear of the house. To accommodate this woodwork the lower part of the roof was extended at a new angle. The roof extends for some distance beyond the end walls of the house. A large brick chimney protrudes from inside the north end wall and a smaller chimney from inside the south end. Another is located inside the end wall of the wing.

Across the road from the house is the stone end barn which includes grainaries as part of the main structure. Typically it has vertical ventilator slits in its end walls. A rectangular indentation in the west gable appears to have been made for a date tablet. Any information inscribed there could not be read. A pair of tile silos stand behind the barn. Modern barns and other outbuildings are associated with the complex as well.

The property includes 74.63 acres.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This farmstead would appear to date from the mid 19th century. The two story, five bay farmhouse and stone end barn are typical examples of the period. The late 19th century accretions to the house are rather elaborate and should be noted as part of its architectural history. The house has two front doors which could suggest dual usage, and the owner related a story that it also served as an inn. The close proximity of the house to the national pike makes this explanation plausible.
